Author Describes in His Own Words Why He Writes Poetry

Many say I am a born poet since I never studied poetry, yet there is so much emotion in it. I have been called a whispering poet, as my words seem to touch many people.

I was inspired to write this book because I have amnesia, and bought a computer with writing pads and pens without knowing I had done so. After so many great reviews and constantly being asked to publish, I decided to go ahead with my book of poetry. Though I did not know why I was writing my poems, they still feel very personal. My poetry comes all of a sudden. I can see an object and build a poem around it.

My thoughts are always looking into the distance and to faraway places. I write of romance, nature, childhood, and life in general. Sense of Words is my first book and it includes just over 100 poems. I have now written over 1,000 poems and I also have a children's book in the works.

About the Author: Bobby Ferguson of Glasgow, Scotland, was told in 2008 that he had 18 months to two years to live and would never walk again. Seventeen months later, he had a 30 percent chance of surviving a cancer operation, "so I should not be here." So it makes perfect Sense that he wants to write.
