Poor Little Rich Boy Really Just Wants His Parents' Attention!

This insightful children's book explains the importance of spending time with your children. In fact, paying attention to your kids is much more important than buying their affection with gifts!

The Best Feeling in the World doesn't come from having everything you could possibly ever want. It comes from feeling appreciated and loved. Eight-year-old Simon learns this the hard way. He appears to have it all and should be one very happy little boy! His bedroom is painted like a comic book, he plays all the latest video games on big-screen TV, and a robot even cleans up after him.

But Simon is not a happy child. What he really wants is parents who spend quality time with him, because he's seen the great family relationships of his best friends, who feel sorry for Simon. When Simon's mom and dad are forced to reevaluate their priorities, Simon ends up with The Best Feeling in the World.
