Remember Baby: An Audio-visual 'No Kid Left Behind' System for Your Car

Never again should a child die because of being left alone in a hot car.

The inspiration for the invention and writing of Remember Baby came because both parents forgot. The setting is Las Vegas, Nevada on June 29, 2001, the hottest recorded day so far that year.

After reading the tragic account in the local paper, the author was besieged with sorrow, anger, tears, and overwhelming personal grief. While discussing the senseless tragedy with her husband and saying repeatedly, “This has got to stop. Somebody has to do something,” a voice from within spoke softly but firmly, saying, “You do it.” Thinking it was her spouse, she turned toward him, only to discover he was not speaking. Again and again the prompting came, until the author realized it was a divine call.

How could a pastor without formal education in engineering or automotive accomplish such a feat? In answer to her prayers for help, many came to her aid, including the director of automotive for Southern Nevada Community College, who agreed to build her prototype for a safety alarm system that alerts drivers to remove kids from their vehicle before departing.

The book raises the consciousness of hyperthermia deaths of children left in hot cars and promotes preventive safety measures.
